TOP TIPS FOR WINNING ENTRIES IN THE KBBREVIEW RETAIL & DESIGN AWARDS 2021

They're the original, the biggest, and the most sought after awards in the kitchen and bathroom sector so here's some top tips for putting together successful entries...

Entering the kbbreview Retail & Design Awards is really easy and completely FREE. It's all done online and you can log in and out at your leisure to add to or change your entry right up to the closing date.

Here's a few tips to help you make the most of the opportunity.

GENERAL TOP TIPS FOR ALL CATEGORIES

Read the instructions and fill the whole form in

This sounds really obvious but you'd be surprised how many people fall at this first hurdle. The form has been designed to put the right information in front of the judges and subjectively compare businesses or design projects in the best possible way. So fill it all in as much as you can - spending the little bit of extra time to fully understand what you need to do can make all the difference.

It's not a writing competition

Be concise and to the point. You are not judged on how good a writer you are or how many superlatives you can cram into a statement. As long as the information is correct, relevant and tells the story, that's all that matters.

Remember the judges are professional peers

This isn't a sales brochure. The judges know their stuff so approach your entry by thinking about what information YOU would want to see if you were asked to evaluate another design or retail business. What would be the most relevant things you would be looking for?

TOP TIPS FOR ENTERING THE RETAIL CATEGORIES

Don't be afraid to be honest

This has been a year like no other and we can't pretend the coronavirus lockdown hasn't affected business significantly. How businesses responded to the crisis is a distinct part of the judging criteria this year so make sure you're honest about what happened to you and detail your reaction to it. In 2021, survival and rapid adaptation was the priority and the judges want to know all about it.

Facts, facts, facts

You should start planning your entry by making a list of the basic facts you want to get across. For example, "Sales are up 12% since we brought in showroom appointments", "Our new website doubled our enquiries" or "We have invested £10,000 on local marketing and advertising that has already seen a big increase in footfall". These tangible facts are evidence that substantiates your claims rather than them being simply bold statements like 'our events are really successful', 'we do lots of marketing' or the dreaded 'we have the wow factor'...

Be a storyteller

While getting the facts across is obviously crucial, don't be afraid to tell the judges WHY you have made the decisions, plans and strategies you have. What is the backstory that lead you to make those changes, revamp that showroom or try a new revenue stream? Businesses are made by people and often it's the personal touches that make the difference between winning and not - this is especially true when talking about a local business that plays a part in the community.

What's your angle?

biggest companies with the most money, but you do have to show why you're the best at something in your local market - the best showroom, the best team, the cleverest marketing, the most community minded, the most sustainable, the most innovative...you get the idea.

The changing market

Make sure you talk about what you're doing to tackle the biggest issues the sector faces. Don't be afraid to say what you've tried that didn't work as well as what did - it demonstrates a willingness to embrace new ideas. How you changed your business to tackle those challenges and look to the future is as important as what successes you've had in the past.

It's not all about the money

This isn't a competition for who's made the most money or who's got the biggest showroom. It's about your local market and how your business tackles it with the resources available to you. The tiniest showroom with a good turnover can be a fantastic retailer simply because of the role it plays in the local community, the creative and inventive ideas it's had to keep itself going in a difficult market and how it's a model of best practice that much bigger retailers could learn from.

TOP TIPS FOR ENTERING THE DESIGN CATEGORIES

Focus on the point

The questions on the form are very straightforward but they've been honed over the years to provide the information that the judges use to differentiate one design from another. So get to the point and answer them as fully as you can.

Plans, plans, plans

The judges are professional designers too, and to really understand your project they need to see floor plans and elevations. It is essential that you include them in your entry. Seriously.

Pictures sell more than words
It is so important that you have good pictures of the project. It's not a photography competition but you do need several pictures that show the entire room space from different angles. Close-ups of taps look good but don't really tell the judges anything about the project as a whole.

Details, details, details

It's often the smallest details that set designs apart from each other and, frequently, they are not necessarily aesthetic choices. The limitations of the space, the problems that needed solving, unusual products or finishes, why you put things where you did, managing client requests. These details are especially important if you're using branded furniture or products - what have you done to make it more than simply a choice out of a brochure?

Consider the criteria

There are six different judging criteria and each carried EQUAL weight. Aesthetics is only one of those criteria. This is why the prettiest - and most photogenic - design doesn't always win. The other criteria are: meeting and exceeding the brief; problem solving; product and material choice; unique ideas and initiative; and value for money. Think about ALL these when choosing the project to enter and writing the submission.
